Property Description

When investing in property in any country there are different laws to abide by.
Whether you are looking to purchase a condominium or exploring the option of owning land and a house there are certain legalities to be aware of in Thailand.
Condominium titles Investing in a condominium in Thailand is the most common means of property ownership amongst the expatriate population due to its ease of maintenance.
The cleaning and upkeep of the condominium's communal areas are the responsibility of the managing agent, paid for by the common area fee.
However, the process of purchasing a unit in a condominium is straightforward too, and investors should be aware of the following points.
Foreigners can only own up to 49 percent of the
