Property Description

As Thailand’s real estate sector shows signs of sustained recovery in early 2025, prominent developer groups are now sounding the alarm on emerging risks that could derail this fragile momentum.
This April, both the Thai Condominium Association and the Thai Real Estate Association have publicly urged the government to introduce additional stimulus measures to counteract global and regional pressures that threaten buyer sentiment and transaction volumes in the coming quarters.
External Risks Affecting Buyer Confidence Two major factors have developers on edge: 1.
US Trade Tensions and Economic Slowdown The ongoing trade standoff between the United States and several Asian economies has raised serious concerns over global financial stability.
Currency fluctuations, export uncertainty, and a dip in business confidence are already impacting cross-border
