Property Description

Thailand’s push toward residential solar energy reached another significant milestone with the expansion of the rooftop solar buy-back programme to 500 megawatts under 10-year agreements beginning in June 2026.
Combined with the ?200,000 personal income tax deduction for residential solar installations that took effect in March 2026, homeowners in Hua Hin and across Thailand now face an unusually compelling case for solar adoption.
For property owners weighing the financial and practical merits of rooftop solar, understanding how these complementary programmes work together provides essential guidance for capturing maximum value from Thailand’s solar energy transition.
The buy-back programme expansion reflects the government’s response to rising electricity costs and the broader energy security challenges that global instability has intensified.
As electricity tariffs face continued pressure—with
